Glass, Loren, Chad Harbach’s MFA vs. NYC: The Two Cultures of American Fiction, 1/204
“This gathering of translations from the pages of the Hudson Review is a testament to a far-reaching editorial vision that for more than sixty years has brought so much of the rest of the world to American readers and writers.”

— Geoffrey Brock, author of Weighing Light

“A monument to the good taste, longevity, and value of the Hudson Review. . . . There are poems and plays here that will positively delight readers, inform them, and make them think about what it means to try to do justice to a work of genius in another language.”

— Brian M. Reed, author of Hart Crane: After His Lights

For this issue’s cover, we held a contest soliciting photographs of Iowa City literary landmarks. The winning entry was Matthieu Biger’s ghostly shot of the back entrance of The Haunted Bookshop, which in 2013 moved into the 1847 Wentz-Stach House at 219 N. Gilbert Street, taking over from longtime tenant Murphy-Brookfield Books. “Both are pillars of the used bookstore and local literature scene,” writes Biger.
