Projects at Iowa

- Project Leader(s)/Coordinator(s)
- Administrative Liaison
- Several task focused groups (task force; working group, etc.)
- Decisions made by group consensus
- Many meetings / a lot of time
Assumptions

- We don’t know if/how Primo will replace the OPAC
- Users expect to search first and think later. Facets and drilling down into a result set can replace complex queries.
- Quality relevance ranking trumps precision
- Fast response time is required for a model that implicitly encourages inefficient searching
Assumptions

- De-duping and FRBRizing algorithms are complicated – we cannot divert significant time/energy to fine-tune these algorithms.
- We should not spend time on theoretical decisions affecting hypothetical situations.
- The University of Minnesota is similar enough to our own institution that we should normally accept their conclusions regarding usability (unless there is a compelling reason not to do so).

Search (March 12, 2008)

If you are looking for information about a topic doing a broad, default search, Smart Search will provide you with links to a lot of information. The default search looks for all items that contain the words in your search string in any order, anywhere in the record. After the results are returned, you can focus in on the types of information you are looking for by using the Refine My Results facets on the right side of the result page. Are you looking for only online resources? Follow the online resources link under the Top Level facet to limit the result set to those resources that are available online. Do you want to narrow your search results to only German language videos? Use the Language and the Country/Form facets. The numbers in parentheses indicate how many records you'll see if you refine by a particular facet.

What People are Saying About Smart Search

Getit (March 12, 2008)

Question: When I'm searching for an online resource, I find catalog records for the resource, but it's not intuitive that I need to go to the full record (click on the title) and then figure out how to link to the resource. Can you make it easier to access online resources?

Answer: When you perform a search in Smart Search, you first receive a list of brief records for your result set. The only time you need to go to the full record (click on the title) is if you want more information about the item. Smart Search is designed to get you access or access information as quickly as possible. In the lower right of each brief record is a link to make it easy to access your item. The list of access links includes:

- Online access (Getit) - provides online access to databases, digital images/collections, journal articles, web pages, etc.
- Available in your library (Getit) - provides access to the holdings list in the Libraries' catalog InfoHawk. This access link appears when the item is currently available for check out. The holdings list provides location information for the item.
- Checked out (Getit) - provides access to the holdings list in the Libraries' catalog InfoHawk. This access link appears when the libraries own the item, but it is currently checked out by another user, or is unavailable at the moment. The holdings list, in addition to location information, also provides status information about the item (due date if it's checked out), process status...
