Abstract
We develop and test a theory of the supply side of third party conflict management. Building on an existing formal model of mediation (Kydd 2003), we consider several factors that increase the pool of potential neutral mediators and the frequency of mediators’ efforts to manage interstate conflicts. First, we argue that democratic mediators face greater audience costs for deception in the conflict management process because the media in

Abstract
Unintended pregnancies continue to be a public health concern in the United States. An analysis of publicly funded family planning services was conducted for the state of Iowa in order to determine the benefit of averting unplanned pregnancies with the voluntary use of such services. The benefits are reported via a benefit-cost ratio with the benefit representing the potential avoided public expenditures for every dollar spent.

Book Series

IOWA POETRY PRIZE

The Iowa Poetry Prize was first awarded in 1990. Originally called the Edwin Ford Piper Poetry Award, the series was renamed with the 1993 award. Until 2001, the award honored only writers who had already published at least one book of poetry; the award is now open to new writers as well. Books in this series have also won the James Laughlin Award from the Academy of American Poets and the William Carlos Williams Award from the Poetry Society of America.

This free collection will include award winners through the year 2000.

Award Winners from 2000

- The penultimate suitors: poems, Mary Leader
- A point is that which has no part: poems, Liz Waldner

Award Winners from 1999

- Isolato: poems, Larissa Szpornuk

Award Winners from 1998

- The oval hour: poems, Kathleen Peirce
- Wake: poems, Bin Ramke
- Try: poems, Cole Swenson

G. R. BOYNTON'S NEW MEDIA AND POLITICS

This collection reflects Political Science Professor G.R. Boynton's research of how new media trends such as microblogging and streaming video are transforming the way people exchange political information. His collection of campaign videos is available in the Presidential Campaign Videos collection. He writes about his ongoing research on his website.

In Fall 2009, students of Professor Boynton's courses, Global Political Communication (030-166) and Multimedia Politics (030-174), explored the connections between Twitter, a popular microblogging platform, and more traditional news sources. The student projects are archived here with supporting data captured from Twitter.

Welcome to ICRU’s Online Poster Submission Forum!

We are glad that you are taking steps to complete your submission for our upcoming event.

ICRU, in collaboration with Iowa Research Online, is pleased to offer this NEW online registration which is a wonderful resource for our community. Essentially, the program will archive all submissions into a searchable database through the library, making every presenter and their poster a star! After registering, students are able to upload additional information to their searchable record. Students can upload a final paper or media of a project including a digital version of their actual poster. In addition, students can edit their profile and craft abstracts that will be searchable by others.

ICRU is very excited about this new online resource and encourages students to revisit their submission with supplemental resources either before or after the event. However, after the submission deadline, data will be pulled for <dc:description>This paper describes characteristics of presidential support scores compiled by the Office of Congressional Relations (OCR) from 1961 to 1967. These characteristics are compared to similar scores compiled by Congressional Quarterly (CQ). The OCR scores were based on votes known to be important to the presidents, while CQ could not make such distinctions. This difference in vote selection generated important substantive and methodological implications. For example, the OCR scores reveal that Republicans and southern Democrats were much less supportive of the presidents than CQ suggests, while northern Democrats were much more supportive. This, along with other CQ shortcomings revealed by the analysis of CQ-OCR differences, argues for the use of the OCR scores when attempting to explain presidential influence, and a sensitivity to important problems with the CQ scores when the OCR data are not available.</dc:description>
