1984

Trees That Look Like Rain

Stephen Haven

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/ijls
Part of the English Language and Literature Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0743-2747.1108

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in Iowa Journal of Literary Studies by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
A leaf, a green leaf's not one color, one side's slightly darker, I say one's lighter.
The wind flips it first one way then the other before the storm clouds break.

And the tree on which it hangs with many other leaves
looks like rain.
It thrashes its long branches
like Medusa in a rage.
That tree has nothing to say

but says it anyway:
first waves of light
then darker waves
of wind pass through the leaves and later
that foliage turns brown.

If the tree doesn't mean anything by that,
I still take it as fact:
when trees look like rain
they show the underside of all green things.

Or so it seemed that day
walking along the river with storm clouds rolling in.
All the trees there looked like rain. I have no regrets.
I won't see you again.