1971

They Have Gone

Rafael Alberti

Mark Strand

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.1140

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
They are the leaves,
leaves destroyed only because they wanted to live forever, because they didn’t want to think for six moons about what makes a wasteland, because they didn’t want to know why a drop of water insists on hitting a naked skull already nailed to bad weather.
Other disgraces could occur to us.
What’s the date today?

The leaves sweep themselves into piles with the bones that in life never acquired rights to a tomb.
I know that I hurt you,
that there is no place to escape to,
that the blood in my veins has suffered a seizure of smoke.
You had yellow eyes and now you obviously can’t understand that they’re ashes.

We are not.
We were this or that.