PARTS

this is the part in the movie where the violins hum this is the part where we see no one in the room our eyes stumble over a chair as the light dims the door must be about to open this is where the answer is about to shed itself like a light across the screen we are at the center of the empty room we see even the curtains are waiting there is a voice about to emerge and ask is anybody there?
and because we have tightened our throats so long it will seem like years before we speak

THE ALARM

for Steve

A faulty burglar alarm goes off and you, still coiled in sleep my friend, rise to dial the manager.
Police arrive. And in the end we all crawl back to bed. Four times—then, on the fifth, I hear your screams: my lawyer will call yours. Rocks will smash the windows of your dreams.
Your anger sings. The singleness you wanted most flees, to return altered and in control. The alarm, the damned alarm rings on and on.
