In Ignorant Cadence

Maura Stanton

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview
Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.1583

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
All night I hear that dance, the flesh blistering white under the blue shell-bone. Surely I ate their poison, that forbidden membrane caging the sweet meat. Sleeping, my husband belongs to these ladies who root in my belly, tongs flashing, tongues bitter with the need for children. They admire my skin. I see it peel off: My lip will fall that way; the nose-bone grub forward. My great-grandmother’s casket photograph showed a woman’s chin caved-in like tub lard. Tonight the mirror is precise. I imagine everything, me, hare-lipped, earless, a thousand maggots at the brain.

IN IGNORANT CADENCE

The chemical tapestry of your brain amazes the heart of you, all those ions & neural protons clicking into scenes or wishes. Your tongue is alive in your mouth like a slippery fish so why can’t you say anything? Even Philomela, throat staunched with rags, managed to shred her weaving fingers until the thread equaled recklessness from once upon a time. The tongue of a bird is a delicacy—yours, a distraction you never understood, a hopeless slab of muscle forever wobbling on the edge of song.