Sentence
William Freedman

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.1610

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
RESOLUTIONS

January burst out like a prison-break with resolutions to go straight if I'm not caught.
Hard work, a touch of grace, and a guard sleeping in his high house have given me time.
But the sirens are winding up my thread.
They know who I am and, familiar with my history, where I might be found.

SENTENCE

This poem was written after a visit to Lohmai Haghettaot, the Ghetto Fighters Museum near Acre, Israel

My reflection in the glass of a photograph of children of the Ghetto of Lodz in nineteen hundred forty-three when yellow stars spoke from a wary sky and dragged space after leaving room for blood to pour and nothing poured but heels on cobblestone and No's slapped on windows faces, orders the new ordering of stars not the glowing bear, the hunter or the dog, but the true line of yellow stars the fine chaos of perfection and my bodiless reflection surprised in the sun's corner like a god among stars ducking back and passing on.