Standing on the Corner

Philip Levine

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.1781

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
Standing on the Corner
/ Philip Levine

until Tatum passed
blind as the sea,
heavy, tottering
on the arm of the young bass player, and they both talking
Jackie Robinson.
It was cold, late,
and the Flame Show Bar
was crashing
for the night, even Johnny Ray
calling it quits.
Tatum said, Can’t believe how fast
he is to first. Wait’ll you see Mays
the bass player said.
Women in white furs
spilled out of the bars and trickled toward the parking lot. Now it could rain, coming straight down. The man in the brown hat
never turned his head up.
The gutters swirled
their heavy waters,
the streets reflected the sky, which was nothing. Tatum stamped on toward the Bland Hotel, a wet newspaper stuck
to his shoe, his vest
drawn and darkening.
I can’t hardly wait, he said.