1975

Complaint against Crows

Elton Glaser

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.1795

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
Complaint Against Crows
/ Elton Glaser

In the August cornfields, the crows thin in winter, tumescent by May lurch black and sleek as politicians.

I hate their icy hearts,
their dry, scrabbling feet . . .

They are boring
like the letters I sent long ago complaining to you of love.

What do I complain of now?

These words
and the small defections of the mind.

The way the breasts of women at sixteen sweep back and forth in their gaudy halters like radar.

Exile, a northern sun
scraping on the windows, the palaver of leaves from a strange tree, the explicit silence of snow.

The soft fall of money in another hand,
praise fitted and draped on another name,
peace expanding a worthier heart.

The inquisitions of the future,
the inquest of the past . . .

And these crows, these insolent crows fat with satisfactions of the harvest, beating their black wings against the grain.