1975

Richmond Barthé: "Meeting in Lyon"

Melvin Dixon

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview
Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.1861

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
& a small head noddin
crowd gathered diggin
on his music

Richmond Barthé: Meeting in Lyon / Melvin Dixon

Lyon is a city of two rivers and Roman aqueducts two thousand years old. I come by snake-roads through the faces of three mountains; following butterflies and the tracks of old bones.

I find you in the hour of molding and the time of two rivers running here. Old fingers press into clay; the old ones touch the young and help them believe.

I look into eyes that have seen through stone,
I listen to lips that gave language to the clay,
I touch the spidered hands that bent bronze into blues.

Africa Awakening, Meditation, Shoe Shine Boy,
Your blood hardens into stone. "Study nature," you tell me in riverwords that pulse two veins in Lyon and leave Roman remains.

It is why your young-old eyes are thin-skinned and burning. Mississippi, New York, Jamaica, Italy, Sweden and more fire. Bronze burning in black fingers shed the thin skin, shed the twisted muscles, shed teeth and tears, leave the inner music and the mountain butterflies to show the way.

II
Two rivers swell in Lyon and clean the old dust.
History is stone polished black,
is blood and burnt bronze.

Your blood hardens into stone poems. "What color is art?" and "What color is love?" The questions and your crisp eyes clean me, let me know the years you read the muscles torn from proud black chests, from open stilled mouths, from wide nostrils and ebony bones and now reading me.

How I ache from being opened in these hours and cut by these mountains and two rivers.

Who were you once in marble reincarnation? A statue, a flesh carved god? A rock leading to mountaintops?
Who you will be next will meet me; that is why we cannot say goodbye here.

Rivers keep swelling and swelling, keep cutting mountains, keep washing the Roman stone,

And one man lifts his wings; his neck veins stretch alive though the sun boils him and this land heats a kiln, this history a steady fire and two rivers burn:

We begin to heal ourselves by our own believing—

The clay now bakes its own warning and the statued marble collects the blood prizes. But can these words too become bronze breathing, or rock hardened and cut tall to ride horseback in Haiti, to swing machete and still dance?

Talking to My Grandmother Who Died
Poor Some Years Ago / Alice Walker (while listening to Richard Nixon declare “I am not a crook.”) no doubt i will end my life as poor as you without the wide verandah of your dream on which to sit and fan myself slowly without the tall drinks to cool my bored unthirsty throat.

you will think: Oh, my granddaughter failed to make something of herself in the White Man’s World!