1975

Coffee

Lee Van Demarr

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.1878

This Content is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
Narrowly Avoiding It / Lee Van Demarr
And long ago we were serious.
Then we began to hate it and Hate led us where everything had been
When it was nothing.
To be serious was epic, was Being dead on a shield and Carrying it home at the same time.
There were so many absent places,
All of them absent where we were
Or where we belonged.
There were so many lost people,
So many of them were us,
Wearing the enemy’s battered helmets,
One with a swaggering red feather.

Memling / Lee Van Demarr Compassion like a violin:
understanding what’s never reached.
Despite his eye’s devotion arrows, bubbling oil, the widening crescent wound get it done. But his love found colors that are their calmness.
An actual love, and so entirely uncertain whether his or theirs.

Coffee / Lee Van Demarr
Coffee, brown as dirty ice, the color of the unfaithful coming excitingly back.
I love a warm coffee bean, I love the cool, prowling left-over cup, and the first cup, a moron in black feathers.

The man put his head into the coffee, with both hands on the table. When he entered the cup his feet were dragging as if reluctant.
The lights deepen over a still face.
On the surface of coffee night is falling and a blind waiter leans over with stars and sugar.