Fettuccine

Brenda Hillman

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.1881

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
of history.
I imagine you bending over them,
suddenly amazed.
Putting them into your satchel
to hoard wonder and shyness
as if they were wives.
And on the banks of the pond,
an old choir
of elms, singing from
the frozen earth as you passed.
To the rest of the world, friend,
those lilies were fresh.

Fettuccine / Brenda Hillman

for JF

The pasta drips down in degrees,
slung over a cord to dry in various lengths,
a strange pipe organ, bleached white.

He smells his grandmother’s house in the bowl. The dough hardens, but he forces submission, with a rolling pin;

they’ll soften by our suppertime.
And where he hangs them, the air
looks slashed and yellowed, old papers

or stalactites in a well-lit cave.
They’ll stand up on their own
till they’re cooked down.

Meanwhile, what creamy splinters in our home! What unique bones!
As if his whole past bared its teeth at once.

And he puts his face close, into the dough,
to sense how much he’s grown. And with what sticks he is staving off hunger.