1975

The Wild Cherry Tree out Back

Marvin Bell

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.1916
for bark chips!
Then we both laughed.
I don't think she ever did any tree chewing though.
I didn't ask her.
_Translated by Howard Norman_

---

POETRY / H A L P E R I N , B E L L

Spring Morels / Mark Halperin

The light stripes, flecked with a red like the cheekplates, longed to fill the nearest hole. Tendril and tongue—what swayed was a stalk and flowerhead, a snakehead and flowing, a slip of scales, muscle laying itself over itself in coils.

I stood in myself and kept quiet.
I inched back, making room
as it wound around a stone, curves sharper, as it brushed a stick and seemed to announce: this visit is over, thinner, half memory, lost in the distance, when I noticed the first,

the last thing its tail had flicked then left, a spring morel, one mushroom in a field of mushrooms.
On the mornings I come to scatter last year's leaves and pick them I wonder how I missed them in the past, knowing, in the night light, they can't last.

The Wild Cherry Tree Out Back / Marvin Bell

The leaves are kites.
What are their goals?
In snow and sun
it files upwards—to where?

It more than fills the painting one might have made.

It shadows and shrinks
the person who might have stood beneath its reaching.
It seems to make its own light.

Let me be like that tree,
one might have said,
before the carving
had come far from the wood, before the map was a shoe and the branches were made oars.

That was before
we could piss in a drawer,
when snow and sun were tact,
the tree too personal for words.

Let me be like that tree,
putting to rest
the spring and wandering.

FIELD S OF A CT I O N / C R I T I C IS M A N D P O E T R Y

Introduction / Thomas R. Whitaker
Two issues ago we brought together under this heading essays on Joyce’s Ulysses, Pound’s Cantos, and Olson’s Maximus Poems, a review of Eshleman’s Coils, and new work by Denise Levertov and W. S. Merwin. In this issue, too, we emphasize the variety of movement that is possible within an understanding of the poem as a field of action.

Sherman Paul here traces further the continually renewed activity that impels The Maximus Poems toward a “familiarity difficultly won”—but a “security never attained.” Charles Molesworth assesses the equally “American” but quite different improvisatory art of Frank O’Hara. Ronald Johnson’s Won(l)ds—from which we excerpt two sections—shows how a poet whose