Hunting

I lurk on the floor of silence to escape the jostling sounds I want to flower with silence prefigure birds with intimations of their forms as the clear air prefigures a tall mountain is it a betrayal of thing love hope the gates of your house and mine a good hunter blends subtly with the forest becomes part of its green throng grows in it like a beech tree fern guelder-rose then the big game comes to the green hand and dies of its greenness consider silence it is like a forest break a twig there it explodes like a gun

The Cap

when I first looked that way my leg was resting by this cap when I looked at it for the second time the cap had fallen half-way down my leg by the third glance it had crossed the river and was clearly beyond me at the final glance I could not see it at all even beyond the mountains and forests
