The Cap

Tymoteusz Karpowicz

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.2019
Hunting

I lurk on the floor of silence to escape the jostling sounds I want to flower with silence prefigure birds with intimations of their forms as the clear air prefigures a tall mountain is it a betrayal of thing love hope the gates of your house and mine a good hunter blends subtly with the forest becomes part of its green throng grows in it like a beech tree fern guelder-rose then the big game comes to the green hand and dies of its greenness consider silence it is like a forest break a twig there it explodes like a gun

The Cap

when I first looked that way my leg was resting by this cap when I looked at it for the second time the cap had fallen half-way down my leg by the third glance it had crossed the river and was clearly beyond me at the final glance I could not see it at all even beyond the mountains and forests pity we can no more see each other I remarked guessing its direction don't whine for your cap it replied you no longer have the head for it

Cat

I can't see you clearly it is all a lie but everything is much simpler: taste of water shadow of chair flight of steps life death let my word and object meet like two kissing mouths the cat gnarl-like on that tree-branch wants a bird not a metaphor

Axe

when the day has peeled away completely we bury its white kernel deep in the earth stand our bed over it and keep an axe handy to fight any attacker even in sleep

the iron purrs silently digesting the cool expectation of a blow rubs against our hands kisses our fingertips swims under the pillow rocks our head slides down our neck and shoulders touches our hips and thighs gradually shifting the forces of gravity which imprison us in a factual order of things inter-laces our hair with parallels twines its helve round the meridians suddenly we ride the snug horse of sleep kicking its flanks searing its mouth the horse rears up clears the first obstacle and with a dry crack we are detached from our shadows the taste of metal floods our mouth and we partake in the communion of heroes we are now admiral nelson at trafalgar a simple soldier at verdun st george swallowing a fiery dragon our hair sings heroically and nobly the raging