To the Calligraphy of Chusa

Changkyung Sung
Sang Chankgyung
Kim Chong-Gil

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
The Exercise

A fish
did not know what water was.
On asking,
the wisest fish
answered:
if you want to know what water is get out of the water.

Translated by Susana Heringman with Donald Justice

To the Calligraphy of Chusa*

A dragon with a writhing body and a beating tail, tearing the heaven with his scales;
An angry tiger with flashing eyes, leaping up and down an immense crag;
But now the dragon, being helpless, begs power of you;
The tiger, deprived of his muscles, can no longer leap.

What innocent baby would gaze at your strokes without fear? What emperor’s tyranny?
What lunatic or what devil could mimic your breathtaking feat?
What swallow’s flight could assume your perfect grace more easily yielded

*“Chusa” is an alias of Kim Chong-hi (1786-1856), a distinguished scholar and calligrapher, admired in Korea as a completely original artist.
Than silk from a silkworm? What fairy's flowing robe has ever enjoyed it?

Your cornerstones, pillars, beams, and even the tiny nails driven into them Sink in a deep slumber, enchanted by their own complete forms and weights, Like indifferent minerals, scattered, at random, over the mountains. Yet they keep awakened, their strict positions like the constellations in the sky.

Cubism and fauvism, those whirlwinds of the century, take their origin in you; Deformation, by virtue of you, becomes a worthy mechanism. By virtue of you, Depression, heaped up like a pyramid, scatters. Inflated egotism becomes incandescent. The age-old mustiness in the walls vanishes. The sea-wind with ozone in it, blows in. What wisdom could unravel the meaning of your expression in strange laughter? What rod, that crushes up impurities, could be merciless like you? The water, earth and wind of Korea, by which you were fostered, Treasure forever a far-reaching pride for the thundering flaps of your wings.

Translated by Kim Chong-Gil

 MOSHE DOR / ISRAEL

Progression

Even more terrible than crumbling, the dark feeling of niches, the jokes of purposeless entrances and exits, the conflagration of maple leaves like a forewarning: but to keep silent? A temporary solution, the memory of your body, and more limited, of your breast,