TWO POEMS / CHARLES TOMLINSON

In the Intensity of Final Light,

In the intensity of final light
Deepening, dyeing, moss on the tree-trunks Clares more green than the foliage they bear:
Hills, then, have a way of taking fire To themselves as though they meant to hold In a perpetuity of umber, amber, gold Those forms that, by the unstable light of day, Refuse all final outline, drift
From a dew-cold blue into green-shot grey:
   In the intensity of final light
A time of loomings, then a chime of lapses Failing from woodslopes, summits, sky, Leaving, for the moonrise to untarnish, Hazed airy fastnesses where the last rays vanish.

Underground

Tall—too tall
for a dancer—I'm a dancer' was all
she'd say, shrieking
clicking a routine
in the one space
they'd cleared between her and the wall: those nearest, on the packed platform were backing away to avoid
her flailing legs:
animal activity,
decay of faculty
bespoke a woman who moved with neither
pain nor thought,
insensibly subdued
to endless sound:
all the crowd
she disowned utterly
facing her wall,
lost in the space
they'd left her
and never once
did she turn
round to accost
or denounce them: well-dressed, you could see
