1977

The Holy Island of St. Aidan

Jon Silkin

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview
Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.2160

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
Hartburn divides night on itself with a shutter. 'Mildred clamp out the dark.' Cream lace embroiders its holes.

The huge energies untwine, and stars slither away on the braids. The wagging stems of sex slather to inane fruitfulness.

Not a thing to comfort us. The holy's fruit taps at the church's stained glass where solstice clenches its day, and small energies out-thorn, the profusion of winter at mid-night.

The Holy Island of St. Aidan / Jon Silkin

Primitive light streaks the sky.

Lindisfarne: wreckers clang their matins and shine the guided light; the sea gulp.

Dawn lowers its leaden rose, the negative sinks in the developer's tray. If men are pierced by want

Holiness conceives murder. Midsummer storms the sea and the hulk under the long shook rope of waves surges on Northumbria's teeth.

Mortal things. The flop, the cracking of them. Day wipes clean that slate. The mild castle, church, priory laced with Ionan leaf, chevron, and the stone grape smile to the sea. Mortal things.

The moon in its system, the connections snapping.