1977

Distant Faces

Daniel Halpern

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview
Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.2290

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
what she is thinking about.
She can’t know I’m here
and wouldn’t care if she did.
She sits there as I sit here.
And then she laughs.
Startled, I turn back into the room. She watches me from the bed, smiling gently—
at what, I wonder.
Her cigarette is a gray ash that drops
into the white air of the sheets.

Distant Faces / Daniel Halpern

Sometimes at night
I go out to the terrace
lit by red neon
that vibrates the still air.
I lie down on bricks
whose coolness calms me
and remember those who have left for cities in the west,
or the midwest,
or for nowhere at all.
After a little I go back in,
and in sleep call back
those familiar faces.
Or else I remain on the bricks
and press to my body
the coolness that keeps those who have left me
so distant, so far away.