Vivaldi in Early Fall

John Engels
driving, drumming on the dash.
Now that he's gone
they deal decisively with vegetables.

My pockets clink
with jeweler's tools, obscene secrets I use on my own marriage.

I wish
you would go home
where you can't hear them.
I wish you would go away from the very fact of my happiness.

He left you because your teeth are even.
He left you because a high wind hit Sumatra.
He left you because your eyes are green.

Vivaldi in Early Fall / John Engels

O this is what it is to be Vivaldi in September, in my forty-sixth year, the pines just beginning to sing on the hillsides, the rivers coloring with the first rains ( which are, as usual, precisely on time ). And there is also this young girl, who, each year, I bring into my mind, making it to be that if she knew by what measure I considered her, she would turn and look at me and smile, thinking, "It is the priest again, the one with red hair, who is said to make music, and who—as every year—has gone a little sweetly crazy, and I think he may love how I am today in my blue dress.’ And she is right. In September I am moved to the melancholy theme: I like to make the cello sing with the pines, be on the verge of the thunderously sad. And, as always, at this time, I would like to make the melody go on forever, but cannot, being cursed to disdain of my narrow lusts and sorrows. I have never said that with me an innocent angel is alone at work: it may be I exercise the murderous grace. But in September the face of God passes through my walls to show me how the motion of song sleeps at the center of the world, as, indeed, among the Angels, innocent of time. I hear at this time every year the voice that loves me crying out return, return! and I do, I round on the beginning in full belief:

and the girl is gone having never breathed as I breathe, in the weary exactitude of matter. The song stops at the certain moment of its growth. It is the truth of me, not any lie that I imagine, and I can do nothing with it. Still, it is Autumn, and over the whole world the air resumes its liveliness, and I, Vivaldi, possessed of love and confidence in measure wonderful to me, I seek to magnify the text: viola, bassoon, cello, and it is as if the trees have broken into song, that the song roots, blossoms, thrusts deep toward the still center, and overspreads the sky like a million breathing leaves.
