1977

The Homecoming

Reginald Gibbons

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview
Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.2299
The Homecoming/Reginald Gibbons

This summer the garden really did make.
The mildly toxic tapwater percolates at a boil through string beans.

Bread and salad on the table, the knives and forks that never have changed.

As I walked past the closet doors they swung open like vaults and displayed the artifacts of an earlier self, stacked neatly,

but for a journey I made without them: I wanted nothing with me, and one day I will have to pay a stranger to return to all this archaeology and sell it.
Nothing, in fact, is ever thrown away, but still a ceaseless devotion to creditors has kept the gods of income and expenditure hovering at the windows: they exact ed a sacrifice, once, through the junkie who appeared brandishing a gun and (even here, in the deputized shade, under dripping, subtropical eaves) demanded the forgotten hopes glittering on your ring fingers, and the key to the car . . .

Your grandmother would like you to call her.

The trip there
leads to the realm of the fabulous—

the ribboning scissortails
pose a last time on the wires;

new apartments rise haunch-first, half-timbering faked over plywood; and the glowing malls

whose werewolves of commerce thrive on a diet of credit. But—attend to the unremembered and the old:

“Drive Friendly” past buzzards standing

glutted at the roadside; fetch groceries
from the U-Tot-Em; heed the factory roar transmitted through anesthetizing airconditioners to every den . . .

As we eat, eponymous heroes haunt newscasts and conversation: Travis, Houston, Polk, San Felipe—streets
where trucks collide

with a televised whisper and an occasional building crumples in flames.

Lethargic thoughts acquiesce
as anchormen recite today’s crime report:

Homicides 7, Robberies 82, Assaults 29, Rapes 6
Double this sum, multiply by nine, walk thrice in a circle. There is a decorum that demands one’s silence.

Don’t you want more gravy?
This road leading home—through the security check, jet din, past concrete fields, yaupons and banana fronds, to this fiefdom of regret, dotted with petite tract castles—ends in an old routine, the clearing away, the ritual refusal that greets an offer to wash the dishes. The closet doors swing shut. There is a decorum. Put out the light, let love fill the dark.

Condensation / Stephen Sandy

A wisp of straw hangs from the apple branch. On his window condensation blurs his view, couples walking by the river. Apples, spilled by the wall.

This autumn plenty. There, white noise from the heart. And no one to hear the old voices, the singing. The cricket crutches moonward from the cooling hearth. This small clamor in his blood is somehow some small knowledge of his child: which will become a protean encroachment on the petty dark of solitude.

Possession is nine-tenths of the disenchantment. The hills go platinum with frost.