Poem with Sedative Effect

John Engman

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview
Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.2447
Poem with Sedative Effect · John Engman

On the hospital unit where I work a young girl wrote “I love you” on the walls with excrement. A Valentine of shit.

I wrote in the proper blank space, “Patient has apparently expressed hard feelings on the evening of the 25th.” There are no easy feelings in the books I’ve read about the schizophrenic, psychopath, psychotic. “There are feelings lodged between my stomach and my mouth I can’t cough up,” she said. Then she wept because the color of some old hallway linoleum was very red. I knew of no technical term for such an act, I wrote

“This patient does not seem to be herself.”
I meant neither one of us knew who she was.

Pleased to be involved in the act of love anyone could issue

the ugly, guttural noises she did.
She called every name of god

from Lucky Stars to Elohim.
Thorazine finally put her to sleep.

Because I am instructed to mistrust appearances every fifteen minutes

I was an astronaut lost in space and charted the position of the girl who never moved.
She was like a mural of the dark and stars.
In a blank space on the brainboard I wrote

"Patient has apparently slept last night."
And then I went home and wrote this poem at dawn.