1979

The Lapidary Poems

Jon Silkin

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview
Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.2492

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
The Lapidary Poems · Jon Silkin

To the memory and work of Merle Brown

Brecht’s War Primer is written in “Lapidary” style. The word comes from the Latin Lapis, “stone” and describes the style which was developed for Roman inscriptions. Its most important characteristic was brevity. This was conditioned, first, by the effort required to chisel the word in stone; second, by the realization that for one who speaks to a succession of generations it is seemly to be brief.

“Commentaries on Poems by Brecht” by Walter Benjamin

The Chisel Grows Heavy

The chisel grows heavy, fewer words would lighten the hands; and to keep him who wanders this hard ground like scurf, scurf the size of leaves, or who grazes the mild squares of London, is unseemly.

So who is this? Earth’s fingers revolve earth. Those who search will pass through me.

Lapidary Words

Lapidary words: for it is hard to chisel stone; and to detain the reader at the tomb softened by moss, and the lichen’s bruised studs of gold, is not seemly.

You, too, would not want to take from the wonderer grazing the mild squares of London his time you now bear.

There’s no more; the lichen’s nail innocently feeds its point into the child’s burying place.
The Lapidary Style

The lapidary style, brief as a cut in stone, for it is hard to cut that.

And for such words: to those spangling the road
like wheels, to speak brief is seemly.
A long life of the short time; we all try.

Out of such a day, the day blazes
of some soft shade its great viridian branched at the vitreous brick. Fed of the body’s plight incandescence, that works

every inch of this little yard
clasped to the road like a dead bride.