1979

On the Back of the Note I Left You When I Went out I Have Written This Ode

Christopher Howell

Follow this and additional works at: http://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.2514

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
On the Back of the Note I Left You When I Went Out I Have Written This Ode • Christopher Howell

Scrapping my shoes on the last stars just now as I came in I saw your body shimmer as the soul slipped out tipping its hat to the air and the imperturbable room. Darkly in lampglow your wondrous hair calls out to Russian peasants dreaming in your coded blood. The next room or century is where I speak from. But they are only time and space, nothing to the ocean your sleeping wings across, seeking the deep ancestral roads of Anapola for the exact cheek bones and broken smile your Zadie brought in that grey ship rocking.
Did he look at the moon the whole way as you do when we travel through the night? As you do now somewhere over darkened water?
It is such damaged truth the heart requests.
And so I send this on by some messenger who knows where best moonlight is burning from a Russian face.
May it find you as voice finds flesh in every season: luminous and new, homing down the flyways of the blood.