1979

The Spa of the Posthumous

Sandra McPherson

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview
Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.2517
The Spa of the Posthumous ·
_Sandra McPherson_

They have prepared the mud. We try
   The rest cure, the thorn house, the inhalatorium.
The men tip their hats, women twirl
Their canes to each other on the walk.
   Green and sky, pink sun canopies . . .
We drink the pumped waters. The orchestra tromps.

I like the continuous balcony. Each room
   Has antlers (antelope and roe deer),
Pewter jug, pewter plate, pewter bottle.
I get the pewter bowl from over the wainscoting,
   Ladle bouillon from the tub in the hay-box.
I unfold the bed, draw the deep

Red pullman curtains. When I sleep
   I am further along the family tree:
I can hardly remember the low German.
   I hear lo of angels, low
   Chatter gulfs my pink casket.
But it’s really not finished: the digger has

Not quite prepared my therapeutic mud.
   A shovel leans against a tree
Behind the family. Look at their caution!—
Wary of the rootless fly-green grass-cloth
   They step up on to worship,
Afraid it is hollow underneath . . .

I remember a brink like that: the day I watched them dig
   A man who was building our sewer
Out of the landslide.
They were looking for his black hand
   In the lithosphere, for the slope
Of his hard hat. Now they are looking

For us all, the peachy bath attendants
   Digging us out. Help me sir;
Give me your arm as I step to the duckboards,
Take the handshower to my old skin
   To separate the clay
From what I know as myself.