1980

Lines Begun in Dejection

Vern Rutsala

Follow this and additional works at: http://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.2567

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
Lines Begun in Dejection · Vern Rutsala

Hard on the land wears the strong sea and empty grows every bed.
—John Berryman

Tonight I feel dejection around me like the bad air in a room after a forced apology.

The house carries it—old sighs, bad fish, the silly song you fall for every time, sentimentality washing over you like wind from the stockyards.

Believe me, it’s here and tonight I seem to wear it—my shirt out at the elbow, my left shoe nearly worn through.

“Seedy” is another word for it—one drink away from the winos I see passed-out by the river every day.

Looking at the paper, seeking distraction,

I even read the business page and see those smug faces, so and so moved up the ladder, another transferred to Mars. I look like them a little—add haircut and tie—and even long for that smugness tonight, to be District Manager of vowels! But the world grows empty and the strong sea is too far away yet the old rage remains, and has been honored day by day, is being honored now as I dredge this swamp of apology and old cigars, this landscape of eggshells and winos. So, Dejection, you didn’t expect this turn of events did you, you sonofabitch?

I honor the old rage now as it returns and snakeskin failure suddenly peels away, pulled off like cellophane from a cheap cigar.