1980

Globe

David Schloss

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.2582

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
Globe · David Schloss

From the other side of this world I am on I push a pin into a place I know little of—

yet I can still summon up a life with its name:
Home—and its reflection
on my face is like a mirror of my fate,

of what age has brought.
How little I have grown away from that place

buried in my brain,
thousands of neurons
sifting through the lobes
like sieves to retrieve

some lines from a past I’ve forgotten.
Once I did what I could
to try to be good,

but the words which come seem like repeated screams:
how did I get so small inside of my dreams?

She comes to me and says,
Is Mommy here yet?
I say, Yes, and then
I point to the stairwell.
Then she says, Where?
And I point through the air:
Down there, on the floor.
And then she runs away.

A child again, I see how my mother fell,
because of all my hating
to face this world, this hell.