1980

Viva James Dean

Kathy Callaway

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.2647

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
Viva James Dean · Kathy Callaway

Phillipe flew out of Paris, cursing, in his black leather jacket his one-eyed aviator glasses—chasing a Dutch odalisque, his amazone all the way to Sudan. He cried over the Nubian desert, sold her for kief and calvas in the j’m’ma of Khartoum (arguing Céline with the Blue Nile dealer).

He threatened Françoise with suicide in the Trocadero, his scarf billowing out the seventh-floor window—things had gone badly, crapule!
He was coaxed back in with hashish; sold all her books, Algerian rugs, her jewelry. Not to say Phillipe was no good, for one day out of the blue, under the fists of an enraged lover he wrapped me in his jacket, flew me out of Paris with a bottle of scotch for good measure.

Which only goes to show, hoopla!
that something must live wherever the heart flourishes.