A Poem for Women in Rage

Audre Lorde

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview
Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.2734
A Poem for Women in Rage · Audre Lorde

A killing summer heat wraps up the city emptied of all who are not bound to stay a black woman waits for a white woman leans against the railing in the Upper West Side street at intermission the distant sounds of Broadway dim to lulling until I can hear the voice of sparrows like a promise I await the woman I love our slice of time a place beyond the city’s pain.

In the corner phone booth a woman glassed in by reflections of the street between us her white face dangles a tapestry of disasters seen through a veneer of order mouth drawn like an ill-used road map to eyes without core, a bottled heart impeccable credentials of old pain. The veneer cracks open she lurches through the glaze into my afternoon our eyes touch like hot wire and the street snaps into nightmare a woman with white eyes is clutching a bottle of Fleischman’s gin is fumbling at her waistband is pulling a butcher knife from her ragged pants her hand arcs backward “You Black Bitch!” the heavy blade spins out toward me slow motion years of fury surge upward like a wall and I do not hear it clatter to the pavement at my feet.
Gears of ancient nightmare churn swift in familiar dread and silence but this time I am awake, released I smile. Now. This time is my turn.
I bend to the knife my ears blood-drumming across the street my lover's voice the only moving sound within white heat "Don't touch it!"
I straighten, weaken, then start down again hungry for resolution simple as anger and so close at hand my fingers reach for the familiar blade the known grip of wood against my palm for I have held it to the whetstone a thousand nights for this escorting fury through my sleep like a cherished friend to wake in the stink of rage beside the sleep-white face of love.

The keen steel of a dreamt knife sparks honed from the whetted edge with a tortured shriek between my lover's voice and the grey spinning a choice of pain or fury slashing across judgment like a crimson scar I could open her up to my anger with a point sharpened upon love.

In the deathland my lover's voice fades like the roar of a train derailed on the other side of a river every white woman's face I love and distrust is upon it eating green grapes from a paper bag marking yellow exam-books tucked into a manila folder orderly as the last thought before death I throw the switch.
Through screams of crumpled steel I search the wreckage for a ticket of hatred my lover's voice calling
a knife at her throat.

In this steaming aisle of the dead
I am weeping to learn the names of those streets my feet have worn thin with running and why they will never serve me nor ever lead me home.
“Don't touch it!” she cries
I straighten myself in confusion
a drunken woman is running away down the West Side street my lover's voice moves a shadowy clearing.

Corralled in fantasy the woman with white eyes has vanished to become her own nightmare and a french butcher blade hangs in my house love's token
I remember this knife it carves its message into my sleeping she only read its warning written upon my face.