Barren Precinct · Bill Knott

Tightropes cross swayingly from church belfry to church belfry, in one street a pileup of mattresses is burning. If it was snowing it would be like their very first sheets returning, fresh from the sky’s laundry. In the bracingly cold air I see doorframes with no houses, houses with no rooms, and houses where they serve lunch in its most naive form. I amble toward a wood fence, a childishly-chalked bullseye, in which I find some kind of old military medal pinned dead-center: the medal has a pale, harmful ribbon; it flutters and rattles whitely, withstanding the wind, defending the bullseye’s secret, inmost ring.
If cornered, I would agree— with almost no argument— , this medal should get a medal!

Barren precinct, eyes stare at you without our even knowing, like the statue of a buddha they regard you with immobilized eyes, with carven idol eyelids, you are the eternal non-unguent of tearless eyes, the blink that shall never be.
