Still Life

Sharon Olds

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.3177 we kiss him in it, we stroke back his gummed gelatinous hair, his wife and I on either side, we wipe the flow of saliva like ivory clay from the side of his mouth, his body feels us loving him outside the world of the moral, as if we were making love to him in the woods and far away in the field we could hear the distant hymns of the tent-meeting, smaller than the smallest drop of green-black woods dew on his body as we dip to touch him.

STILL LIFE

I lie on my back after making love, breasts white in shallow curves like the lids of soup dishes, nipples shiny as berries, speckled and immutable.
My legs lie down there somewhere in the bed like those great silver fish drooping over the edge of the table.
Scene of destruction, scene of perfect peace, sex bright and calm and luminous as the scarlet and blue dead pheasant all maroon neck feathers and deep body wounds, and on the center of my forehead a drop of water round and opalescent, and in it the self-portrait of the artist, upside down, naked, holding your brushes dripping like torches with light.