Out on the street, lovers saunter, eating celery.
_Azucenas_ spill from the windows. Churchbells, anvils, roses ring in a single translation: _Vivid, la vida sigue_, Live, for life goes on.

None of us has time for a single life to stun the air as a flower can, fully realized.

Therefore we gather, _en masse_.

Darkroom Nights

One night in Amecameca’s Hotel _Sacro Monte_
I lay awake—the bed hard, the pillows white with the geranium and stock we put there.
Mountains cold, moon aloof—Edward shivered as he slept. I couldn’t close my eyes.
I watched a chair cast ribs of shadow on the wall.
How well they kept their secrets, I thought—the things of the world mute, patient.

The bed was a lumpy altar—
I had been worshipped there, lifted out of myself, by the ecstasy of my specific female flesh made goddess of the flowers, flush and open.
I was able to stop time, back to the first time we’d touched—let it be always the first time, Edward said. Sex is magical thinking—water burns, flowers dawn in the stones.
The first time, in Glendale, he’d looked at me first through the camera: an hour’s delay, glance as touch, and finally, finally touch—a slippery transit, beyond all limits.
Was it magic, or skill, when he took me naked on the azotea? in the sun shooting finished photographs—decisive, my body a figure of Aztec craft, every curve and cut made with love and power joined in sure design.
I had a dignity delicate and fit.
Yet I'd dread it when he'd say,

Come, Zinnia—

I'll shoot heads of you today.

Those days I lived as a man—that is,
wore jeans, smoked a pipe, refused to make vows to my lovers. I was a willful solitude.
A doctor had said, You will never have children.
I could make no appeal—the doors in my cells slammed shut. My body sealed, a tomb. I appeared to be, and was not, a woman.

I lived in the darkroom of my body, mute of all light. My body had betrayed me—or had it freed me?
I wondered, do we ever invent our lives? We yield, or we rebel. When are we our own?

That night I waited for the moon to sink to dawn,
a glimmer of the irreconcilable just beginning in the back-lighting of my brain.

In the morning we climbed the volcanos. Below stretched a mesa of level green and blankets of water where hyacinths floated, above them clouds of infinite muscle. I saw everything to scale—how small we are. My questions hushed.
What I thought I was, I wasn't. What I thought
I knew, I didn't. What I wished to do,
I couldn't. I was single, a moment alive in skin and bones, simple seeing.
