The White Wall · John Witte

Sick of words, sick of his work, my old friend the printer taped a picture of a meadow to the blank wall. The eye longs for a place to rest. We are all in danger, though in ways we may not be aware of. The meadow is green, a cool profusion of frond and trillium.

Speaking of dangers, he tells me the story of his grandfather arriving alone from the Ukraine, a young man going to work in a mine. Watching the miners enter the tiny shack, he began to wonder. How is it possible to fit us all inside this little house?
He tried to see if another building was hidden behind this one. He began yelling in a language no one understood. His new friends gathered around him, and tried to comfort him, saying this is the only work there is.
