1990

Salt Flats

Mary Hower

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.3854
Salt Flats · Mary Hower

Two of us women in a rattly Datsun—no radio, fuel gauge stuck on F even when empty—driving through where you can't tell if you've gotten anywhere: Nevada, the test state, ulcerous, all this land
slatting into the rearview through the dress rack, purple, your hit eyelid just healing.

You say, “Don’t make a big production of this:
I caused it. You don’t know what it’s like living with me—my moods, my temper.”
Months of your letters,
I wanted to shield you from him.
“Don’t confuse me with a victim—I had a choice,
I chose to stay.”
What if I came to get you? I wrote,
bring you back west,
thinking I was your rescuer—but it’s you shifting gears while I press the clutch to the floor,
the same stubbornness that kept you with him
willing us on now.

It washes out, this road,
closes to one lane, next exit sixty miles away,
no bushes, no relief, the salt shaker sun blinding—
what if we went off the shoulder,
would we sink in the salt, crystals cutting our skin?
And you saying you can’t stand it,
pulling off,
pulling his ring off, resistant as uncorking
champagne, and throw it to the flats, turning white, marrying salt.