1990

Long, Disconsolate Lines

Jane Cooper

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.3877
Long, Disconsolate Lines · Jane Cooper

in memory of Shirley Eliason Haupt

Because it is a gray day but not snowy, because traffic grinds by outside, because I woke myself crying help! to no other in my bed and no god, because I am in confusion about god, because the tree out there with its gray, bare limbs is shaped like a lyre, but it is only January, nothing plays it, no lacerating March sleet, no thrum of returning rain, because its arms are empty of buds and even of protective snow, I am in confusion, words harbor in my throat, I hear not one confident tune, and however long I draw out this sentence it will not arrive at any truth.

It’s true my friend died in September and I have not yet begun to mourn.
Overnight, without warning, the good adversary knocked at her door, the one she so often portrayed as a cloud-filled drop out of the cave’s mouth, crumpled dark of an old garden chair. . . .
But a lyre-shaped tree? yes, a lyre-shaped tree. It’s true that at twenty-four in the dripping, raw Iowa woods she sketched just such a tree, and I saw it, fell in love with its half-heard lament as if my friend, in her proud young skin, already thrashed by the storm-blows ahead, had folded herself around them, as if she gave up nothing, as if she sang.

42