1990

Long, Disconsolate Lines

Jane Cooper

Follow this and additional works at: http://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.3877

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
Long, Disconsolate Lines · Jane Cooper

in memory of Shirley Eliason Haupt

Because it is a gray day but not snowy, because traffic grinds by outside, because I woke myself crying help! to no other in my bed and no god, because I am in confusion about god, because the tree out there with its gray, bare limbs is shaped like a lyre, but it is only January, nothing plays it, no lacerating March sleet, no thrum of returning rain, because its arms are empty of buds and even of protective snow,
I am in confusion, words harbor in my throat, I hear not one confident tune, and however long I draw out this sentence it will not arrive at any truth.

It’s true my friend died in September and I have not yet begun to mourn.
Overnight, without warning, the good adversary knocked at her door, the one she so often portrayed as a cloud-filled drop out of the cave’s mouth, crumpled dark of an old garden chair. . .
But a lyre-shaped tree? yes, a lyre-shaped tree. It’s true that at twenty-four in the dripping, raw Iowa woods she sketched just such a tree, and I saw it, fell in love with its half-heard lament as if my friend, in her proud young skin, already thrashed by the storm-blows ahead, had folded herself around them,
as if she gave up nothing, as if she sang.