Connubial

Heather McHugh

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.4095

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
and signature: the hoist of flesh arrayed on roost of skeleton. The common wisdom is I laughed in heartlessness or mockery: perhaps I did—but at the long and short of it, what good comes to, the soft and hard, the awful fact that what’s alive will rot, what lasts can’t feel. I felt how terrible a figure human being cuts, upon its frame.

And so the laugh like a cry from my own perscrewed, misnailed, cross-crafted armature rang out, outrang the meeker mourners and polite conventioneers . . . The heart is a muscle. The tooth is a fang.

What I gave at the sight of him there was up. What I got of humanity there was the hang . . .

CONNUBIAL

Dream is matterless, it dips from bounds to billowings, laws lapse in it,
or universes swerve.

Before I had an other at my side

there was no side: how far can onesome go? Just being here at hand, just being, beating in and out of phase, you are my bearings: touch is couch about aflow . . .

* (Blind comfort maybe, keeping endlessness away. But one is one's own zero, hole through which the all can plunge appallingly . . . I'm not cut out for it: I'm for an other, meaning hand and mind, in sense of having halves at all.) Perhaps I've settled for a circumstance (our landings broken by water, our stars by blue).

So be it. Loving's limited.
I'm saved from terrible eternities by you.