1995

Aubade

Marianne Boruch

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.4403

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
poplar, maple stained the sidewalk. Their fate is to become something else. One foot and one foot and one foot. The way is deeper now and the leaves are under all of it.
I would like to say
I could hear them, that the leaves love to sing and have many songs under the snow.
I would like to say
all kinds of nonsense.

AUBADE

Rain. And the birds—one sings as an acrobat might fake a fall downstairs—every seasick turn graceful unto the darkest landing. But rain carries its weight straight down, like sadness does, falling through a thought to flood a room.

Listen to the yard. One song builds and one unravels. Because I dare not move, because you’re sleeping now as you never do.
I know that lantern light in you, and dawn is bird by bird. Rain loves it dark and makes a sea.