1996

Polyp

Michael Davidson

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.4590

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
Michael Davidson

POLYP

This Summer they are replacing the voice with consonants performed by the lips and tongue that penetrate your mouth when we speak and find ourselves in what sound furthers, then the anemone opens, flutters and folds around the sound of water, the letter five

I can’t pronounce these silences without damaging us, the little phonemes we practice before replacing the receiver, what else is the voice for if not the social,

bodied like blips on a grid so that if an island is invaded by sound language is waiting to speak it into hats and medals, I read the paper in silence not believing anything, but “we” is speaking in its vowels, the U into which everything pours, the A, foreign to myself, on a good day I remember the infractions as clearly as a ship on a good day something has been written and speaks back.