DRIVING CATTLE FROM TEXAS TO IOWA, 1866

Among Iowa pioneers no two were better known or more highly respected than George C. Duffield,1 of Keosauqua, and Harvey Ray of Burlington.

The Duffields came to Iowa from Ohio in 1837 and settled in Van Buren County, where they lived the rest of their lives, and where many of their descendants are still living. They are mentioned often in the ANNALS, and their qualities are therein set forth.

Harvey Ray came from Wheeling, West Virginia, to Burlington in 1848. He was associated with George C. Duffield in a cattle enterprise of which Mr. Duffield preserved a partial record. Mr. Ray does not so often appear in the public prints of Iowa and at the request of the Curator of the Historical Department I have prepared the following sketch.

Harvey Ray was in many respects a remarkable man. He was a typical pioneer. The story of his life is a story of adventure, of the founding of important industries in untried fields, and of struggles to develop them. He had faith in the West. He was a man of tremendous energy, of the strictest integrity, and could command capital for undertakings of importance. He was born at Tyrone, Ireland, in March, 1817, of Scotch-Irish parentage, came to America in his youth and located at Wheel-1George Crawford Duffield contributed valuable recollections of early Iowa to the ANNALS in 1893, 1904, and 1906. His obituary notice appears in the October, 1906, number of the ANNALS.

The veracity of the late Emerson Hough in "North of 36" was challenged in its dominant fact-element, cattle-driving north out of Texas. He may have exceeded in his treatment the liberty historians would grant, but he carried into the attention and intelligence of Americans east and west, notice that there was an era and a system of cattle driving before railroads came. The art of fiction demands and harmony requires Hough's fancy.

The diary of Mr. Duffield and the novel of Mr. Hough treat of the same era and in future will be thought of as having been published almost simultaneously. The criticism of the one will be met by the diary of the other. Mr. Hough's fiction is as the flesh on Mr. Duffield's skeleton of fact.—Editor.
ing, where he married in 1843, and soon thereafter removed to Burlington. He lived in Burlington for sixty-two years, or until his death in 1905.

Soon after he reached Burlington a severe cholera epidemic broke out and hundreds were stricken. Mr. Ray was conspicuous in caring for the sick and dying and in burying the dead. His fearless devotion in that emergency is one of the traditions of the town.

In 1843 Mr. Ray was a manufacturer of stone buhrs for flouring mills which were operated in those days by water power, and in order to investigate the possibilities of such power along the upper Mississippi, he made extensive trips through that region. When he first settled in Burlington he added tombstones to his other business and imported marble from Italy and buhrs from France. He was therefore entirely familiar with western conditions before he settled in Iowa, and had long been in successful business before he went into the Texas cattle enterprise with Mr. Duffield. He commenced business in Burlington three years before Iowa was admitted into the Union as a state.

Foreseeing its great possibilities as an agricultural state, he established a plow company at Burlington as early as 1852, which was very successful until the great financial panic of 1857, which brought widespread disaster to all industries in the West. During this period he acquired a magnificent tract consisting of 4,200 acres of bottom lands a few miles north of Burlington, which for many years was known all through this region as the "Harvey Ray Farm." The levees built by the government and drainage system installed in that locality have made this land valuable for farming, but in the early days its greatest value was for cattle grazing. The Civil War of 1861 to 1865, following the panic of 1857, greatly curtailed Mr. Ray's business activities, but his ambition was irrepressible and we find him in 1866, immediately following the close of the Civil War, going into partnership with George Duffield in the Texas cattle enterprise.

Cattle do not thrive in Iowa without especial feeding, owing to the long winters, and farming in that state was at a low ebb from 1861 to 1866, as most of the active farmers were in the army.

On the other hand on the plains of south Texas, which know no winter and where grass grows luxuriantly, immense herds of cattle accumulated during the war. It was reported that steers could be purchased in Texas at eight to ten dollars a head and would support themselves on an overland drive to Iowa, with large profits, and several adventurous spirits went into the business, including Duffield and Ray. In the case of Ray there was the additional motive of stocking his Ray Farm partly with Texas "Long Horns," as they were called, and thus improving the breed of cattle.

A partnership was accordingly formed early in 1866 with the object of buying 1,000 to 2,000 head of cattle in south Texas and driving them north to Iowa, and the details of this enterprise are set forth in the remarkable diary of George C. Duffield, which this sketch is intended to supplement.

They went to Texas via New Orleans and Galveston, and the middle of March, 1866, found them in the Colorado River country west of Austin, Texas, where they contracted for 1,000 head of cattle at twelve dollars per head. After outfitting and getting their herd together, the cattle were all carefully branded, and as a considerable part of the drive was through the Indian Nation, and some of the tribes were hostile, the herds of many outfits were combined, so that at one time they comprised over 5,000 head.

Six weeks were consumed in Texas buying and branding the cattle, so that it was the first of May before the start for Iowa, which ended the last day of October, with a few hundred cattle, at Ottumwa, where 100 were shipped by rail to Burlington for the Ray Farm, and the remainder to Chicago.

The story of the events of that drive, as vividly portrayed in the Duffield diary, is a recital of endurance and courage amounting to heroism, that has few parallels in American pioneer life.

Two years later (1868) found Mr. Ray engaged in another great pioneer venture. The mining excitement in Nevada was at its height. Ray organized a company at Burlington to haul a stamp mill overland from Burlington to Virginia City, Nevada, and the next year they sent out a second mill. Later they established the first stamp mill at Butte, Montana, now one of the greatest mining camps in the world, and Ray is said to have once owned one-eighth of the city of Butte.

Although foreign born, he was among the best of his type of the American citizen of his day. He was public spirited, a great believer in our republican form of government, and our common school system, and willing to contribute to every worthy public enterprise according to his ability.

He was never in politics, nor politically ambitious. His great ambition was to establish and promote laudable enterprises, with the natural desire for personal profit along with the public good. He was ever honest, upright and generous minded. He lived to a ripe old age, notwithstanding his very strenuous life, dying at Burlington in his eighty-eighth year, honored and respected by all.

NEW FERRY

Across the Mississippi River at Eagle Point, 2½ miles from Dubuque on the road leading to Galena and Wisconsin. The subscriber would respectfully inform the travelling public and others that he has established a ferry at the above named place. Persons going from the northern part of Illinois or Wisconsin into Iowa will find this much the best, nearest and cheapest route. The accommodations at the ferry are good, having just built a strong large, and swift TWO HORSE POWER BOAT of the most substantial character, and it will be attended by careful, accommodating and experienced hands. Ferrying done at any time between sunrise and sunset.
