Quatre Cents Coups

Gail Hanlon

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.4814

This Contents is brought to you free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
opening the front door at six with a bag full of lettuce and ice-cream, these I remember well.

I never imagined that I would be alone like this although I practiced being blind as a child, arms outstretched, a priestess in my flannel gown; feeling the wallpaper as I climbed the stairs to bed, anticipating perhaps that my retinas, transparent as egg sacs, would thin and nearly break some twenty years later.

I always thought I'd care for you when you were old. I think I said I would.
Instead, you didn't so much age as slowly disappear; creeping away like someone who doesn't know how to ask for a divorce.

QUATRE CENTS COUPS

after Truffaut

Juggling white eggs in your thin brown hands, you bark at me and I sink into it, ducking
out of range,
playful as a dog.
Little flags,
like brittle autumn leaves, fly up in my brain
saying jeez.