1997

Crystallography

Eugenius Ališanka

H. L. Hix

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.4900

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
CRYSTALLOGraphY

I
sight strikes the mote, language climbs down the cornice, vowels of fog
and sharp consonants, clear hours partitioning the night, everyone—like an ice-floe flushed out by voices, but silver nets catch them too,
the cloth is quartered
and numb fingers grope
for a loose thread, farther and farther, where only destination is left but not death, where the cloth of stars is too bright for an open wound,
the square piazzas taps out steps all night,
ever clearer the winter, every higher the white chiton of Noah

II shadows shattered into sharp flashes catch in cloth, only the blade of frost strips the aura: the target of the sky the trajectory of language stretches over the longest nights—myth of ourselves falling to earth
III
by lips of frost
I create your image:
in the hollow of vowels air trembles,

limitless
blue january, starless moonlit night but feeling in the light like burnished copper, along the outline of the body the clock's hand stencils

the monogram of being

Dialogue in a Cellar

the river's mouth swells and floods cellars, gravel, herbs smelling of iodine—the bed of the sleeping traveler wrapped in his sunny dream, who cares about him, who cares about an amphora recovered from the holds of a foundered ship near dardanelle's straits, a closed form in itself, not taking root in the squares of rooms and the frames of pictures? there are many aesthetics, says the professor, and the strangest one is under care of powers that abhor us