1998

Comfort

Richard Lapidus

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview
Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.5031

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
Richard Lapidus

COMFORT

While slowing down for the Miami Beach gin rummy team, I somehow remembered to seem happy that the surprise yellow something-or-other (I suspect a sweater)

my grandmother had sewn, fit.
My grandfather couldn’t make it for lunch (he happened to be dead, rather peeved at not being fed

his caviar and canapés—fish eggs and can-of-peas was what he always said to me).

In the hey-day of being alive,
Grandpa ran hootch, stopping for nova and chives

at the Carnegie Deli. Canada to New York to Virginia Beach, where retired sailors drank orange and peach schnapps on New Year’s Eve, saluting women who stopped loving them in Beijing, or was it Peking?

When the phone calls stopped, Grandpa was there with triple sec, lime juice and shots of vodka.

Those sailors, mired in their schooners,
clinging to each other like honeymooners,

were old enough to recall what I don’t remember, was it Signor Marconi or Alex Bell who was the inventor?
When I think about heaven, it’s a bed and breakfast overlooking the ocean, three-masted ships still whaling the eastern coast, remarkable room service, absolutely smashing coffee and toast.