The Return

John Forbes

Follow this and additional works at: http://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.5048
THE RETURN

I often dream about the ocean and would like to write a long ode to water, because I live on a drought stricken flood plain next to a sea where a baked delta opens between glittering sandstone cliffs & the dunes and beaches make holiday resorts seem like colonies in outer space.
Where are the green islands? Where are the sticky hibiscus flowers, the paddocks full of clover and grass, the intricate mangrove swamps & the mud that squelches between your toes?
    Instead I am covered in salt—the same brother you forgot whose wounds were like rumours of the rains’ failure but who returns even so, just as the wet arrives after weeks of dry storm lightning out to sea & who stands in front of you dressed in his flash city clothes but suddenly shy, like a stranger embarrassed by wet footprints and tears & the sudden atmosphere of drama.