2000

UFIs

Diane Furtney

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.5283

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
Diane Furtney

UFIs

Columbus, Ohio 1998

Not a terrible day, exactly, just a longish, afternoon foray into Stupid Land, with the usual souvenirs: compression, hurt, some disarray. But in the near distance, over the mall’s parking lot, crowds are ambling now the way that fish know how to amble, and clouds in the east, thin and dusky, frond up over the lighted movie marquee under which a couple of friends already wait, both expert at opening the gate to the Land of OK. Still, it’s from somewhere entirely else, the sudden feel of lift, it’s like an inner flare after a breath of something like an off-Earth air, and abruptly all the molecules in this medium-sized organic module find themselves well across the border into the Land of Fine, re-intact and in good order.

Oh, I wouldn’t claim that it isn’t routine, just an epi-event: a burst, maybe, of dopamine after a protein dinner; or ATP, charging across membranes F and R, thereby enlarging a lot of peace-of-mind receptors.

Even so, it's the kind of thing that could appear, being such a specific experience, on a life list of emotional events:

the giant loves, the moderate loves, the graduation out of loss or into loss, this occasion and that of motherhood and fatherhood, the repetitions of bad and good varieties of heartfelt self defense, plus, oh, a hundred and seventeen instances of Unidentified Flying Integrationals, each independent of the will,

arriving out of nowhere and good, maybe, for hours, who knows? Who knows a thing about the ordinary powers?