INDEX TO ABANDONED TOWNS OF IOWA

By David C. Mott

There has appeared in each of the five preceding numbers of the ANNALS an installment of our article on abandoned towns, villages and post offices of Iowa. The subject was treated by taking one county at a time and arranging the counties alphabetically. A brief amount of information about each place was given as to location, date of existence, and as to whether it was a town, village, hamlet or only a country post office, when that information could be obtained.

In our introductory article, Vol. XVII, No. 6, p. 435, we set out our plan and gave our principal sources of information. As we then said "we only claim for this survey such accuracy as was made possible by the authorities at hand." In many counties, however, we received very fine help from persons who thoroughly knew their counties, while in some other counties we failed to get the careful co-operation which we desired.

Having treated the places by counties and with some information about each place as above stated, we are appending below all of the 2,807 names in alphabetical order, giving no information except the name of the county. This list will enable one to quickly find the names of a great many old towns or villages or country post offices that have long since passed away.

For several reasons these 2,807 names do not mean that that entire number of places—towns, villages, or country post offices—are abandoned.

Some towns or villages have been absorbed by adjacent cities or towns, and have become a part of the larger corporations, losing their former identities, and finally their names. There were 46 of these. Witness Boonesboro now a part of Boone, Lyons now a part of Clinton, Sevastopol now a part of Des Moines.

Some have only lost their original names and assumed others, such as Bloomington, now Muscatine; Montana, now Boone; Grant, now Clarion. Some even lost more than one original name, such as Miller's Hollow, changed to Kanesville, and finally to Council Bluffs. In all there were in our list of 2,807 names, 362 of them that are only names discarded for other names.

Some of the abandoned towns really bore two names, the name of the post office being different from the name of the town. Lithopolis was the name of the post office at Steamboat Rock, Hardin County, for many years. Amazon was the name of the post office at the village of Richmond, Madison County, and so on. Then some of the small towns had nicknames, or double names, such as Harpersville, or Stringtown, Davis County. There were 119 of these old places with double names by reason of having nicknames, or of having post offices with names differing from the names of their towns.

There were 75 towns laid out, or staked off, and named, most of them getting on the county records and on the maps of those days, that were never built up. Poweshiek County had one, Ottawa City; Keokuk County had two, Western City and West London; Wapello County had several.

Eliminating the 46 towns or villages that have been absorbed by other towns or cities, the 362 that lost their original names by taking on new names, the 119 that had more than one name (as one for the post office and one for the town, or a double name by reason of a nickname), and the 75 that were laid out but never built up, there remain 2,205 actually abandoned places—towns, villages, hamlets, or country post offices.

It will be noticed that in 25 instances the word “Old” appears in parenthesis after the name. This is to distinguish the old and abandoned town from the newer and present one of the same name which is near by, such as Rolfe, Pocahontas County, Rippey, Boone County, and Macedon, Pottawattamic County. It will also be noticed that 18 names are followed by the letters “P. O.” in parenthesis. This is to indicate that the place was a country post office, and to distinguish it from the present town nearby, which was named for the country post office, as Eagle Grove, Wright County, and Defiance, Shelby County. We have paid no attention to the discontinuance of a post office where the village or hamlet is still in active existence.

Here follows the 2,807 names with the counties in which they were located:

THE INDIANS ARE FEARED

The inhabitants of the west side of the Mississippi are complaining loudly of the Indians, who in emigrating west to the district of country allotted them by the government, have squatted down among them. These are the same Indians we alluded to last winter as hunting on government lands. They are at present, as we are informed, extremely insolent, and in many instances have threatened the lives of the settlers. They say that it is their intention to plant corn on the Maquoquita this season, and to drive the whites off from the lands and compel them to take refuge on this side of the Mississippi. The settlers in consequence are alarmed, and in one or two instances have brought their families over to this side. Disagreeable results will shortly happen if there is not something done on the part of the government agents to check the lawless propensities of the Indians and to remove them from the lands. It is said to be hazardous for the settlers to leave their cabins, as the Indians will enter them in their absence, and carry off anything to which they may take a fancy. If there is no other resort the settlers will be obliged to band together for mutual protection and safety.—Western Gazette and Galena Advertiser, Galena, Wisconsin Territory, April 8, 1837.
