2003

The Fall

William Trowbridge

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
The Fall

Just to stymie Lucifer and the other angels
He knows are talking union, God reorganizes, makes Fool His chief gofer in creating out of the void what He’s deemed “the blown deuce coupe of universes.”

“Hold this,” says God, handing him a main gear while adding a can of Motor Honey to the crankcase.
“What?” says Fool, who drops the slippery thing, which rolls out the unsurpassedly burnished door,
down one of the identically impeccable hillsides,
and falls through a cloud.

“Give it here,” says God, holding out a third hand, His regular two and His head still under the hood. Fool looks around the shop, spots a cracked flywheel from a heavenly tour bus and hands it over.

“Feels kinda light,” says God, as He shoves it into place and gets a little flash that He’s triggered something He foreordained in a tiff two universes ago.
“Um,” answers Fool, drowned out by the gnashing.