Sotto Voce

Kathleen Flenniken

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.5700
Sotto Voce

Tonight blame Kiri Te Kanawa infusing the kitchen with her aria, blame the mixed bouquet of basil and flayed tomatoes and onions and one expansive high note blooming like a rose in fast-frame.

Here in the audience, even in middle age, a little voice sings from the back of the auditorium of my throat. Aren’t all of us waiting to be discovered?

Men and women enter the grand halls of regional sales meetings pressing nametags to dresses and ties.

I have been one of those people entering hopefully, conducting delicate exchanges in hotel rooms.

I have called those pale disclosures my life. Blame the cheap seats we bought in the balcony.

We barely hear the little cogs in our own hearts. Mozart, they say, heard entire operas in a moment—second violins, a glaze of harp, heroic voices in the chorus all clamoring to be realized at once. My genius may be small, but sometimes truth rolls right at me like a hard head of cabbage and I see myself that suddenly, draining the pasta.