The Expletion of Tan

& so Broca planted his name on that region of speech, on that brand of aphasia Broca’s Region Broca’s Aphasia (The Expletive of Tan-Tan)

Broca died of an aneurysm in his brain expletive tan tan-tan tan & what did those fissures of Tan-Tan’s locution hold what triple rhythms of tan what punctations of pause between that one shrunk syllable’s expletion of all other words "The meaningless syllable Tan” Medieval Latin tannum.
Tannin. Tanbark. Shredded bark. Cortex: Latin for bark.
Bark of the brain’s half-stripped tree. In the Macon Hospital, in the ICU, I came from the Boy Scout jamboree to see my father, stroke-ridden, for the last time & hear his last words, not words but a gutteral lung-deep when he heard me speak his name, a grunt that grew louder & more urgent till I fled that room—

Now he calls me up, in sleep, sometimes, & the operator-static whistles I am required by federal law to inform you you are receiving a call from someone known to be deceased, & I hear that desperate-to-connect bark again, that gnarl of syllable peeled off

its meaning & growing shriller (Tan Tan Tan Tan Tan)

to carry off throat & glottis & tongue what the left brain’s stripped bark knows, & doesn’t know how to tell it knows

—& I crush that phone in my hand.
